Old, young or none of the above?

Jill Pertler
SLICES OF LIFE

For most of my life I viewed myself as old. Even when I clearly wasn't. It's about perspective.

The memories are vague, or even nonexistent, but when I was 2 I got a baby sister. By age 3, I'm pretty sure I thought I was old. For sure much older than my sister, which I held over her head – until I hit 30.

When I was 5 and someone asked my age I no longer had to fold any of my fingers in toward my palm. I got to hold up my entire outstretched hand. I remember feeling like this was a big deal (because it was!). Plus I went to kindergarten. That most certainly qualified me as old.

When I was 8 I was finally allowed to ride my pink banana seat bike by myself to the corner store to buy Laffy Taffy. That sort of responsibility and independence is reserved for those who have attained a certain level of experience and sophistication in life. Hence, in my eyes, I was old.

When I was 10 I reached a new level of oldity: double digits and double hands. Having two numbers in my age was exciting and practically screamed maturity, as well as the privilege of having my mom drive me to the mall so I could get my ears pierced.

The age of 16 is a milestone in nearly everyone's oldometer. The importance of 16 candles on the cake can be summed up in two words: driver's license. I no longer needed a parent to drive me to the mall; I could get there on my own. Anyone old enough to drive a car is old – at least old enough to drive a car.

Everyone believes they are old at 18. And why not? You can do lots of grown-up things, not the least of which is refer to yourself as an adult. It's a privilege you've been waiting for your entire life.

At 20 you are no longer a teenager and that has old written all over it. Looking back, of course, I was probably more kid than grown up, but I didn't know it at the time because I considered 20 old. The same goes for 25. And (eek) 30, which was a biggie for many of us.

Most of it is a blur after that. The older you get, the faster time flies. I remember my parents telling me this; I didn't believe them. Now that I've become them I understand the truth of their words.

Somewhere around mid-30-something I found designating myself as old wasn't as alluring as it had been when I was 8. Instead of the sweetness and privilege of Laffy Taffy, extra years meant responsibility. The prestige of a mini van. Replacing acne wash with wrinkle cream. Fighting the dreaded muffin top. Wearing comfortable shoes. Fine print that seemed finer and fuzzier.

I've been old most of my life, or so I thought. And now that I'm older than I ever was before, I've decided I'm as young as I'm ever going to be. It's a change in perspective and it works for me.

Besides, old or young, it's what you make of it. Age may be an unyielding (and ever-increasing) number, but it doesn't have to be. Oh sure, the calendar will change and technically so will the digits that designate how old (or young) you are. But you get to decide – whether you choose to be 8 years old or 88 years young.

As for me, right now I'm somewhere in between. But young at heart. Hopefully always that.

‘Life is like a box of chocolates….’

I don’t even need to finish that sentence. You just completed it for me. Maybe even with a Forrest Gump accent. You can’t refer to life being like a box of chocolates without picturing Tom Hanks sitting on that bench. Or maybe also uttering, “Mama always said….”

We cannot predict what images or phrases will become part of our pop culture. Some just stick and take their place in our common lexicon. And of course, some things fade away. Pop culture refers to popular and we all know what is popular today may not be so tomorrow.

“Sit on it, Potsie.” Now I’m dating myself. You may remember that, you may not, but that idiom from the television show Happy Days did not become part of our lasting collective lingo.

Kelly Simmons
COLUMNIST

I would like to think that everyone knows what I refer to when I say, “Marcia, Marcia, Marcia,” but alas, some do not. Just like many people today will have no reference if I say, “Judy, Judy, Judy.” (And supposedly Cary Grant never did utter three Judy’s in a row.) (And if you under 40, Marcia is from The Brady Bunch.)

My sons will make comments and I know that they are quoting some show or movie or pop culture reference by the way they say it, but I do not know the origin. And usually I don’t care. That is the real sign of the generation gap.

The FOMO (fear of missing out) or not being “cool” by knowing the “in” phrases is replaced with a shrug indicating that I really don’t mind being out of the loop.

Some pop culture simply becomes part of our culture. Many business coaches and motivational speakers latched on to Yoda Speak. “Do or do not. There is no try.”

The Stars War world is not just fictional, it is accepted as part of what we all know. If you say a person breathes heavy like Darth Vader, people all across the world will know what you mean. It’s not a movie reference so much as common knowledge. And my spell check knows that it’s Vader, not Vadar.

There are many examples of people, places or things, that get morphed into our current world. Call someone a muggle and most folks will know what you mean, even those who don’t give a rip about Harry Potter. A muggle is someone with no magical ability, in case you don’t know. You can look it up.

What I love is that these phrases and ideas didn’t exist until a writer dreamed them up. One person’s imagination launches something that takes hold and becomes part of us. That is thrilling. A writer can never predict what will get rooted in pop culture. It’s not something that can be planned or forced. It just happens.

I wonder if JK Rowling gets goosebumps when she hears someone use the word muggle in daily vernacular and not in reference to her stories. When she was a struggling writer sitting at the café penning her stories, never could she know that the world she was creating would lead to a new entry in the Oxford Dictionary. To me, that is very heady stuff.

Writers make up words, but not all of them take their place in history. Catchphrases may be even harder to linger through the changing times. As of this writing, “bazinga” from The Big Bang Theory’s Sheldon Cooper is not an entry in the Oxford online dictionary.

Pop culture is on my mind because this week as I write is Star Wars day. May the 4th. Even TIME magazine writes about this unofficial holiday. George Lucas must feel wowed by it all. Even if you are not. May the force be with you.

Kelly Epperson Simmons is endlessly curious. Have Kelly speak to your group. Not about pop culture. About writing, books, or science of happiness. Inquire at info@kellyepperson.com. Visit www.kellyepperso.com.

One way we can help each other get through these challenging times is to keep our dollars local. Here are three good reasons.

Reason #1: Shopping locally saves you gas and wear and tear on your vehicle.

Reason #2: When you spend your money locally, you support the businesses whose property taxes pay for our municipal services.

Reason #3: Many of our youth programs are supported and sponsored by local businesses and if we don't support them, they can't support our kids.
