Teddy Bears made from alpaca fiber are soft and huggable.

Pacesetter Alpacas store to open for holiday season

By Dennis Pace
Owner of Pacesetter Alpacas

This is the last of the three part series that I will be writing about our alpaca business. The first two editorials can be found in the July and August issues of Midwest Farm & Ag. There I wrote of how we got started in the alpaca business and what is required to care for these wonderful animals.

It's time I answered the question, "Why do you raise alpacas?" Despite the fact that they are so easy to care for, it's all about the fiber/hair/wool.

As I mentioned in the last article, we shear our alpacas once a year in the spring to harvest their fiber. Each shearing produces roughly five to 10 pounds of fiber per animal per year.

Most people are unaware of the unique qualities of alpaca fiber compared to most other natural fibers. Hopefully this article will change that!

This fiber, often compared to cashmere, can be turned into many different finished products from yarn and rovings to sweaters, socks, gloves, hats, blankets and rugs. The fleece itself is recognized globally for its fineness, softness, light weight, durability, excellent thermal qualities and luster. The Suri Network, a suri alpaca breed organization, says alpaca fiber is second only to polar bear hair for its thermal properties.

Compared to wool from most breeds of sheep, alpaca fiber is stronger, lighter and warmer. Finer grades of alpaca fiber (known commercially as "Baby Alpaca") are believed to be hypo-allergenic, meaning they do not irritate your skin as sheep's wool sometimes does.

Unlike sheep's wool, alpaca fiber contains little to no lanolin. Because of this, it does not require the cleaning that is required for sheep's wool and is ready to spin with very little effort.

After shearing day, we prep our fiber for shipping. The prep that we do is called "skirting." Basically, we put the fiber from each animal on a table made out of chicken wire.

We then pick out any debris such as straw and grass. We also flip it so any second cuts (short fibers) from the shearing fall through the wire. This goes back to getting a quality shearing job.

Once skirted, we send the fiber to various outlets to have it processed, depending on whether we want yarn or rovings or finished products. One place we send fiber to for finished product is AFCNA (Alpaca Fiber Co-Op of North America) . We then buy back finished product that is available in our farm store.

In addition to selling the fleece and the animals, many breeders of alpacas operate an end products retail store on or off their farms. Our alpaca farm store has alpaca apparel, including beautiful sweaters, scarves, hats, mittens and more.

We also have alpaca yarns, blankets, teddy bears and rugs. Once people have felt the softness and warmth of wearing alpaca, they want to come back for more, either for themselves or as gifts for others. What better gift could you give someone than the gift of warmth!

Well, this concludes my articles about our alpacas. Thank you for all the kind comments I

Create holiday gifts that keep on giving

By Melinda Myers

Make this holiday season one filled with creating memories and gifts that keep giving throughout the year.

Terrariums have made a comeback and make wonderful do-it-yourself projects and gifts for beginning and experienced gardeners. They enable gardeners to continue to grow no matter the weather outdoors and can be updated and used as decorations throughout the year with some simple updating for holidays and other special occasions.

Just add a few ceramic items like a Christmas tree ornament, ceramic bunny or other adornment or two that represent the season. Don't know where to start? No problem.

You can create your own from an old glass jar or vase or purchase an elegant terrarium with copper bottom guaranteed to create the perfect stage for your tabletop garden. Or purchase a terrarium kit that includes the plants, container and all you need.

For the artist, young or old, and avid birder, consider a green birdhouse. These biodegradable birdhouses are made from 100% recycled paper and designed to last through one nesting season.

You will have fun decorating it with stickers, markers or paint, making this a gift you and the birds will enjoy. Plus, once the season is over, there's no need for cleaning. It can simply be added to the compost pile.

Not feeling artistic? No worries. Give a decorative treat for the birds. Those with live Christmas trees can extend their enjoyment by decorating the tree with colorful birdseed ornaments once it is moved outdoors. Make your own ornaments from suet, peanut butter and birdseed or purchase ready-made ones.

And no green thumb is needed for this DIY holiday beauty. Easy care waxed amaryllis bulbs (gardeners.com) are self contained and easy to grow. The bulb is sealed in gold or silver wax, making it both decorative and low maintenance.

There's no watering or container needed.

Just set it in a bright location and wait for the floral display to appear before your eyes. You'll be enjoying big blooms for several weeks.

Stay on your diet as the holiday approaches with a sugar-free advent calendar. You can make your own from felt and fabric glue or start a family tradition by purchasing a handcrafted advent calendar like the wooden bird cottage advent calendar (gardeners.com) that celebrates nature and the holiday. Each day leading to Christmas you'll remove a bird from its cubby in the cottage. Peg it to the birdhouse and watch the flock grow. Your friends and family will know Christmas is coming each year when you break out the calendar. It's sure to provide years of memories and could soon become a family heirloom.

Make this the year for creating memorable gifts, trying something new or packaging DIY projects that are sure to provide seasons of fun and beauty.
