Holiday Gift Guide

Extension suggests giving a holiday cacti for a gift

URBANA, Ill. — A holiday cactus in full bloom is a great holiday gift. Easy to care for, holiday cacti generally are long lived and will easily bloom year after year. In fact, they are often passed down from generation to generation as family heirlooms.

When selecting a new plant, look for sturdy, healthy green foliage and new flower buds. Avoid diseased or insect-damaged plants, said Jennifer Fishburn, a horticulture educator with University of Illinois Extension.

Exposure at freezing temperatures even for a short time can damage leaves and cause flower drop, so before taking them outdoors, carefully wrap plants. As with all houseplants, avoid placing plants near register vents or in drafty areas.

"Holiday cacti include the Thanksgiving cactus, Christmas cactus, and Easter cactus," Fishburn said. "The holiday cacti are easily identified by the stem margins. These cacti don't have true leaves; instead they have flattened stem segments."

The most widely grown species is the Thanksgiving cactus, also called a crab cactus, Schlumbergera truncata. The stem margins have two to four saw-toothed projections resembling crab claws.

Flowers are produced from late November to late December. Thanksgiving cacti are often forced into bloom and sold at Christmas time, and are often misnamed Christmas cacti. Flower colors include white, red, lavender, salmon, orange, and yellow.

Christmas cactus, Schlumbergera x buckleyi, has scalloped or rounded stem margins. Flowers are generally showy from late December through March. The flowers are formed at the tip of the segments.

Easter cactus, Rhipsalidopsis gaertneri, has four to six rounded teeth along the stem edges and brownish hairs at the leaf tips. Shades of pink or red flowers appear during March through May. Easter cactus may rebloom.

Thanksgiving and Christmas cacti blooms are triggered by day length. They bloom when they receive 12 to 15 hours of darkness each day for five to six weeks combined with cool night temperatures.

Some cacti will bloom if exposed to prolonged cool temperatures between 50 to 55 degrees during the fall regardless of day length.

"To initiate flower buds, place Thanksgiving and Christmas cacti in a room that doesn't receive artificial light at night such as a spare bedroom or basement," Fishburn said.

"Cacti can also be placed in an unheated porch until temperatures reach 45 degrees. Plants should receive bright light during the day with 55 to 65 degree temperatures.

When plants are in flower, keep them in a bright, indirect light. Ideal temperatures are 70 degrees during the day and 65 degrees in the evening. "Don't let the soil dry out during flowering."

Flower buds will drop if they receive too much light, are exposed to drafts or temperature extremes, or if the soil gets too dry," Fishburn pointed out. "If plants fail to flower, this could be due to interrupted nights or high temperatures."

During the growing season when the plant is not flowering, water plants thoroughly but let them dry slightly between waterings. A major disease of holiday cacti is root rot caused by over-watering.

Water when the top inch of soil is dry to the touch. When the plant is actively growing, between April and October, fertilize every two to four weeks with a complete houseplant fertilizer, following the directions on the label.

Holiday cacti require a bright but filtered light indoors. Keep in mind that holiday cacti thrive on neglect.

"This winter, brighten up the indoors with a flowering holiday cactus," Fishburn said.

Host a holiday cocktail party to remember

(Family Features) With the holiday hosting season knocking at the door, break from the mold of the traditional gathering with a more modern way to entertain. Throwing a cocktail party, complete with variations of classic holiday recipes, and taking advantage of the relaxed, come-and-go atmosphere is an easy way to make countless holiday memories without spending days in the kitchen to prepare.

Jessica Sturdy, lifestyle expert and the blogger behind Bows & Sequins, shares these tips for making your seasonal soiree one to remember:

Signature Sips — Creating a custom cocktail is an easy way to add something festive and personalized to toast your guests, which can include traditional holiday flavors like cranberry, peppermint, cinnamon, fig or champagne.

Prepare a few pitchers beforehand so guests can pour themselves, leaving you time to enjoy your company. If time permits, type up a drink recipe card and place the print out in a fun frame to include at the bar.

Please All Palates — Keep all appetites happy with a charcuterie board by gathering an assortment of your favorite cheeses — perhaps cheeses from around the world or locally.

Mix with an array of meats, crackers and mustards which pair nicely with something more acidic, like dried fruit, pickles or olives.

Smoked over real hardwoods, Johnsonville summer sausages are a delicious choice to help anchor the platter. Display on a tray with character — even an old mirror — to make even the most basic meat and cheese display festive and amp up your serving platter with natural materials, such as herbs or festive holly.

Capture the Moment — Invest in an old-school instant film camera to create your own throwback photo booth. The quickly developed photos will make for great parting gifts.

You can make cute signs that include holiday slogans with a little cardboard paper, glitter and sticks that your guests can use as easy DIY props, and a simple holiday wall banner or sparkly wall tinsel will create the perfect backdrop.

You can also purchase disposable cameras to leave around the party to capture all of the fun moments you may have missed playing host. It's a fun surprise to develop them after the party.

Leave the Cold at the Door — Make your guests feel at home by lighting a fire and positioning some holiday scented candles throughout your space.

Just be sure to keep the candles away from the food so as to not sour the taste or smell of your hors d'oeuvres.

Create a playlist that sets the mood you want your party to embody; from festive Christmas carols to classic jazz to this year's top 50 countdown, your music will set the pace and make your guests feel welcome.

Expect the Unexpected — The key to a happy host is a stress-free host. Be sure to leave yourself with plenty of prep time, have your house cleaned and the bar cart stocked with plenty of clean glasses the day before your event.

Purchase backup food items that can easily be passed around during the party without the extra prep time, such as nuts, popcorn, pretzels and peppermint bark, and don't forget that you can never have too much ice.

For holiday food and drink recipes to make your party festive and fun, visit Johnsonville.com.

Holiday Gift Guide

Tips for picking and presenting perfect holiday gifts

(StatePoint) With a few simple tips, your holiday gifts can be personal, meaningful and beautifully wrapped.

Pick a present

Spend time brainstorming. Make a list of the recipient's hobbies, activities you've done together, favorite places -- anything that might inspire a gift. Take a look at the recipient's social media pages to see which brands he or she likes or follows, or pinned on Pinterest.

Does your brother follow tech blogs? Purchase the latest tech trend, like a smart watch. Does your best friend pin anything with a monogram? Find great gifts on sites like Etsy or Personal Creations, which offer items that can be engraved or monogrammed for a completely one-of-a-kind present.

Head to the store or look online with a specific idea in mind, so you're not overwhelmed.

Shop smart

Do a quick search online for available deals, and to compare prices from different retailers. Deal-sharing sites like Slickdeals provide information on offers across a wide range of product categories, while sites like PriceZombie allow you to track costs for your preferred present. The site will send you an alert when the item's price drops.

Some research also helps you discover which stores have the best selection (and return policy). Be sure to get a gift receipt, especially if purchasing clothing.

Knowing exactly where you need to go -- the sporting goods store, the shoe section, the beauty aisle -- simplifies the entire process.

Personalize packaging

Make the wrapping as extraordinary as the gift with fun, creative packaging. Colorful wrapping paper in your recipient's favorite color or pattern is always a good choice. Next, embellish with ribbons, bows or glittery tapes. Finally, don't forget a card to express how you feel.

Remember, commercial packaging lacks the personal charm and care of a gift wrapped and shipped by you. Luckily, brands like Duck brand offer all the materials you need to easily - and safely - ship your wonderfully wrapped gifts.

Start by selecting the right shipping materials for the size of your item. You may want to consider a cushioned envelope, such as those from the Bubble Wrap brand, when possible, as they're more cost-effective for shipping smaller items, plus provide extra protection for your shipped goods. For larger gifts, wrap them in several layers of Bubble Wrap cushioning for safety, then ship in a clean, sturdy box.

Seal the box with strong packaging tape, like EZ Start packaging tape. It won't split or tear; plus the tape's Frustration Free special release technology means you never lose the tape end, making the entire process easier.

For an even more festive look, consider using a colored or printed packaging tape, wrapping items in colored Bubble Wrap, like purple or red, or adding stickers to the outside of the box -- just be sure there's room for the shipping label.

With planning and creativity, you can purchase and present the perfect gifts for loved ones this year.
