Getting ready for Italy brings back memories

As I pack my suitcase for Italy, I thank my lucky stars. Seven years ago, my Prince and I honeymooned in Italy. That trip was a fairytale dream. We rented a car and traveled to places famous and not. Sometimes I prefer the lesser-known villages and the enchanting places we stumble upon, yet it is also a thrill to experience Venice (iconic the world over) and Verona (home of Shakespeare’s Juliet) and Lake Como, looking for George Clooney.

We hit several locales last time and popped up into Switzerland too. We stayed two or three nights in each spot and moved on. It was jam-packed and incredible beyond words and I am forever grateful.

This trip is more chill. We fly into Milan, get a car, and then drive about three hours to the Tuscany region where we stay for the week. We will take a day trip to Florence and to Assissi and that is the only agenda. The rest of the time, we explore.

Eat, drink, shop, stroll, hike, and be open. We just learned our town is famous for its thermal waters and is considered one of the best spa towns in Italy. So dip me in the waters, give me a mud bath, and relax me! Removing cellulite is most welcome too.

The village also has “sweeping views” and honestly, that is what takes my breath away. The natural landscapes, the hills, the vineyards, the trees, the gardens, the ancient homes and buildings. We will be steeped in art and architecture and that does something to my soul.

Our 8-year-old granddaughter asked why we had to travel so much. “Why do you have to go places? Can’t you just Google it and learn about it?” Insightful in a way, the modern youth, but we tried to explain to her how experiencing something is way more than fun than just watching a video of it.

Papa asked her, “You love going to different parks and doing the monkey bars, right?”

“Yes,” she gave him the “duh” look.

“Well, why don’t you just Google it and look at the monkey bars on the computer?”

“Exactly.”

We think she did get the point because all she said after that was, “Well, when you’re gone, I don’t get to see you.”

Papa and I look forward to being able to take her on some magnificent trips someday. For now, she is overjoyed with local rollercoaster parks. We love the good ol’ USA and we love seeing other countries to learn more of history, other cultures, languages, food, rituals, and terrain we don’t get to walk here.

As I close my suitcase, I smile. Time away is also a welcome respite, a time to let go of the computer and just be. That’s what travel does for me. My senses are more awakened and I take in the grand vistas and the little details. Subtle nuances are often what stays with me.

Before we go, while we are there, and forever more, I thank my lucky stars. Grazie! Ciao!

Slices of life

Working helps bring order to our chaotic world

I worry. We all do. We all have things to fret about and fixate on. Real and legitimate things that could and may go wrong that will mess other things up big time.

And lately – oh, lately – doesn’t it seem there are more major, huge and catastrophic issues to occupy our brain space? It seems that way because it is that way and that, in and of itself, is cause for worry.

So many volcanic eruptions. And hurricanes. And fires. And earthquakes. And shootings. And explosions. And politics. So many accusations. So much criticism. So many terrible things happening in our own country as well as places halfway across the world and we have to pay attention to both because we’ve only got one planet and people are people here, there and everywhere.

So many fingers pointing in so many directions but always away from the person doing the pointing. And the news broadcasts every bit of it 24/7.

Let’s face it. The news can be depressing.

This isn’t new. The news isn’t about the mundane or ordinary. We wouldn’t watch it if it was. It’s supposed to highlight the lowlights (and the highlights, but the lowlights often warrant more attention). And lately there’s been no shortage of lowlights.

Each morning we wake up to a newsflash. In my little corner of the universe it feels like there isn’t much I can do to make a difference in all this. I can send donations and help to those who need it. I can contribute, but I can’t alter the overall situation(s). I can’t right the wrongs or change the world. It’s a feeling of powerlessness. A person could get disheartened with the weight of it all.

I feel that way sometimes. I suppose most of us do – if we are being honest human beings.

But this morning, while the news played on the TV in the kitchen, I did what I do most mornings. Tidy the mess from the night before. I put a few dishes into the dishwasher. Cleaned out the sink. Cleared clutter from the kitchen table. Moved errant shoes to the shoe rack at the back door. I swept and mopped. In between tasks I sipped my coffee. My morning contained no shortage of the mundane.

And then right there, in the kitchen, in the midst of mopping, I realized my overall stress level had decreased a bit (despite the coffee). Clearing the clutter from the kitchen is about as boring as life can get, but in the midst of my ordinary routine I found a sense of comfort that comes from having the power to complete a worthwhile task (even if that task is as humdrum as wiping crumbs from the countertop).

It can feel like the world is falling apart around us. But still, the sun rises and sets each evening. The earth spins on her axis. We greet each day and move forward in whatever way we can, listening to the news, trying to make sense out of the senseless and turning off the TV when we can’t stand it any longer. Doing what we can when we can even though it feels like we can’t possibly be doing enough.

And sometimes, we confront our legitimate angst with the ho-hum of everyday, tedious tasks. Going through the motions is the best we can do because the alternative is giving up or collapsing completely and that doesn’t do anyone any good. And in the midst of the mundane Monday morning this angst may be lessened somewhat, even for just a moment or two, by a shift from the state of the world at large to the right here, right now. By focusing on something – anything – tangible and with the slightest inkling of purpose. By putting one foot in front of the other and moving forward – step by step.

Welcome to delicious.™
