In my opinion

Ten years ago, I was facing divorce. Right now, I am packing for Italy. Ten years ago, I had not yet met my Prince Charming. Right now, we are getting ready to go on our THIRD jaunt to Italy together. Ten years ago, I was only beginning to understand that my life is my making. Right now, I am over the moon giddy and basking in gratitude.

I cannot predict one year from now, let alone 10. And I no longer try.

When I first met my current hubby, I was a planner. Wanting to know what the future holds was a bit of an obsession. I even bought a crystal ball, for kicks, yes, but also because it represented that I thought it would be wonderful to see into the future.

I don't feel that way anymore. Letting the future reveal as it unfolds is way more fun.

Ten years ago, I always felt compelled to think ahead and try to know what was around the bend. Right now, I realize that we don't always know, we don't have to know, and the view can be more spectacular than ever imagined.

Ten years ago, I had an inkling that I could be truly happy. Right now, hell yes.

Ten years ago, I was knowing that my forties would be an amazing decade. Right now, ditto for my fifties.

There is nothing wrong with making plans. I still make them (this Italy trip has been on the books for months). The difference is in trying to control life versus allowing life to surprise me.

Ten years ago, I didn't understand that Life doesn't need me to control it.

Ten years ago, I didn't realize Life could be so magnificent. Every single day.

Ten years ago, I didn't know I could love my gray hair, and savor scallops and Brussels sprouts.

That's the thing about Life. It holds wonder at every turn.

I still fall back into pondering the future, but not in such a worrisome way. As my Prince and I contemplate (early) retirement, I wonder about many things and sometimes try to see too far into the future. My dear man reminds me that ten years ago, we had not met. We had no idea how life would turn out and it's pretty darn good.

Two years ago, we had no clue that we would be in our current home. One year ago, we didn't imagine some of the possibilities we now live. One month ago, I didn't know some things I now see as obvious.

Old dogs/humans can keep learning new tricks.

My crystal ball is for sale, if you want it. It's pretty and sparks curiosity. Hit me up if you want it. I don't need to see too far ahead. This notion of living and loving full out, one day at a time, is working well. It seems to be the way to carve out a lovely future too.

Ten years ago, I was facing the unknown. Right now, I still am. We always are, in a way. And now, that is just fine with me.

Kelly Simmons welcomes your comments. Write kellyjoysimmons@gmail.com.
