How to manage stress during the coronavirus pandemic

Tips for healthy ways to cope

Illinois, it may be tempting to turn to marijuana — as well as tobacco and alcohol — as a way to manage anxiety during the coronavirus pandemic.

But Delta Dental of Illinois is urging Illinoisans to opt for healthier ways to relieve stress this April during Oral Cancer Awareness Month.

"Smoking marijuana can lead to a number of oral health problems including dry mouth and an increased risk of cavities and gum disease," said Dr. Sheila Strock, vice president, dental services and science officer at Delta Dental of Illinois. "It could also potentially lead to oral cancer."

Healthier choices for managing stress include taking outdoor walks and bike rides, participating in virtual yoga and fitness classes, meditating and getting enough sleep. It's also important to eat healthy, well-balanced meals that

With the legalization of cannabis in include dairy and fresh fruits and vegetables. And don't forget to maintain your mental health through social interaction via video chats and phone calls with friends, family, and coworkers.

> This unprecedented time of illness and uncertainty comes with plenty of warnings to stay home, wash your hands, and stay six feet away from

It also comes as we enter Oral Cancer Awareness Month. An estimated 2,030 Illinoisans will be diagnosed with new cases of mouth and throat cancer this year, according to the American Cancer Society. Oral cancer remains one of the top 10 types of cancer among men.

Marijuana, tobacco and alcohol are all risk factors for oral cancer, whether used by themselves or in combination with one another:

Cigarette smokers are six times more likely to develop oral cancer. [2]

Those who smoke and drink heavily are 30 times more likely to develop oral cancer. [3]

Some studies have linked smoking marijuana with an increased risk of mouth and neck cancers. [4]

The risk of oral cancer may be greater for those who smoke both cigarettes and marijuana. [5]

Other known risk factors for oral cancer include sun exposure and human papillomavirus (HPV) infections.

"While research on the link between smoking marijuana and oral cancer isn't yet definitive, why take a chance with your health?" Strock said. "It's best to avoid smoking of any kind whether it be tobacco or marijuana to prevent the likelihood of developing oral cancer."

Peaceful cows in the midst of the storm

In case you haven't noticed, our world as we know it, has been abruptly changed in a very short period of time. It's only been in the past few weeks that major change has come upon us here in the United States and all around the globe. Who would have ever thought this type of disruption could actually happen here in the good old USA? In my lifetime, Americans have never really experienced hard times like these where we have been told to stay away other people and to stop going to work. We are indeed at war. It's as if an awful foreign enemy has invaded our land and is telling us that we can no longer live our lives the way we have been used to. Doesn't it seem like this is all a dream? That we are suddenly going to wake up and the Cubs and Brewers will be back on TV playing in the ninth inning of a tie ball game with fans screaming and hearts pounding.

Let's be honest, we don't know how this is going to play out exactly. The numbers seem to show that people continue to be infected by this plague. It can be a bit unnerving if we let it. Most of us need a place to go, at least in our minds, that provides some calm and peace. For me it has been time each day with the Lord and reading my Bible. It's there that I find real strength and power. It has also been very calming to escape to my barn each morning and evening to feed, care for and milk my herd of cows and calves. I find myself doing a great deal of praying and worshipping as I go about my work. I think my cows have gotten used to my singing as I move between and around them.

There is great strength and peace of mind in worshipping the Lord and comfort in the daily routine of milking my small herd of dairy cows especially in the last few weeks. Cows have always brought a certain level of calm in the storms of life to most of us farm kids. The slow rhythmic way they chew their cud as they lay comfortable on a bed of straw or stand quietly in the barn is most soothing. One of the things I really enjoy as well is walking down the lane to bring the cows up from pasture in the early morning when the weather is nice. They usually are laying down and they slowly stand up and stretch and then walk single file back up the path to the barn.

I pray things get better soon in the world and I also pray that we don't get too dependent on the government. Some of the help the government offers is good, but some of it is a little scary because the more we rely on government, the more power they secure over us. Jesus said we are to submit to those in authority over us, but not turn over our very soul. Take a few minutes today and give your fears to the Lord and remember that He has our attention so that we will put our faith and trust in Him. God provided a way of salvation through faith in Christ and His sacrifice on the cross to take away our sin and to make us right with God. He is our hope and strength.

John 3:16 is the most famous verse in all of the Bible because it is full of eternal hope. For God so loved the world that He gave His only son, that whoever believes in Him will not perish, but have eternal life. Trust God today for salvation and live in peace in the midst of the storm.

Slices of life

When time slows down

As of this writing, at least 251 million people in at least 30 states, 81 counties, 15 cities, and one US territory are living the reality of a stay at home directive. A month ago, hardly any of us had contemplated the concept of a stay at home directive. I'd never even heard the term. Now I'm living it.

Most of us got a few days notice before being asked to selfquarantine (another term that's relatively new to me). So like lots of others, I stocked up - on yeast.

Many foods can last on the shelf or fridge for two weeks, but not bread. My family likes bread. So while others were grabbing toilet paper, I grabbed some yeast. There was plenty of it on the shelves. I guess I have my own unique way of approaching preparedness.

On day two, I decided to make some bread for dinner. We still had some of the regular stuff, but I was at home, with nothing much to do and it was either bread or the laundry. Netflix binging was scheduled for later.

For years (decades) bread intimidated me. I never knew if the water was too hot or not hot enough for the yeast's liking. The process was mysterious and I failed multiple times. But then, I stumbled upon a kitchen gadget that I should have had from the beginning of time: an instant read thermometer.

Now I approach bread making with the skills and tools of a scientific professional. I heat the water to exactly the correct temperature. Add a little sugar to promote yeast growth and then toss in the yeast to let it ferment.

JÍLL PERTLER Contributor

Bread is one of those foods that seems mysterious until you discover how simple it really is. Water. Sugar. Yeast. Flour. Salt. Olive oil (optional). Herbs (also optional). Of course there are various recipes with various ingredients, but it doesn't have to be complicated.

After stirring together the ingredients, it's time to knead the dough. Again, different recipes call for different kneading times, but I like the nice round number of 10

Kneading the bread involves stretching the dough and then turning it upon itself, rotating the mound and then stretching again - and so on. It's a repetitive task that doesn't take much thought. It's almost as if time stands still - or at the very least slows down.

As I stood in my kitchen kneading, I could feel the dough taking shape. A well-kneaded ball of dough feels good in one's hands. It's soft and smooth and malleable. It's stood the test of time.

While I watched the minutes click by on the clock, it occurred to me that slowing down is not a bad thing. Taking the time to knead the bread, to stand in one place for 10 minutes and create something that can be enjoyed by others is perhaps not noble, but it is worthwhile.

Many of us have had our lives slowed down due to COVID-19. We are directed – or at least highly encouraged – to stay home unless we have to go to work or to acquire items for basic needs.

In this, we have been given the gift of time to spend with our families. We've been given the gift of sleeping in. The gift of binging a favorite TV series. The gift of kneading bread for the people we love. The gift of following the directive because it is for the good of others in addition to ourselves. That is a cause that is not only worthwhile, but noble.

We can do this.
