A lifetime of memories and faith on the farm

I was strolling through the farmhouse the other day when my parents had lived together for the past 51 years. We moved to our Wisconsin farm in 1972 when my dad was 38 years old. He just went home to be with the Lord three and half months ago so that makes 51 years together of working on this farm that God led them to.

Each of my parent's eight children love this farm. We love the land, we love the buildings, we love the cows and machinery, but most of all we love the life and the memories that we have from growing up here.

We have great memories of living together, working the land, milking the cows, filling the barns with hay, making improvements over the years, adding machines sheds, bigger tractors and better practices.

God has been good to all of us through it all. Our parents passed on the farm to us kids, and we rent it to our third oldest brother and his family.

Our sister lives in Montana with her husband and their family and my mom has decided to go spend some time there to rest and be away from the workload of keeping a big farmhouse clean, and tending to the gardens and lawn like she has always done.

She just turned 88, and it's too much for her now. Just before she left for a few weeks, I sat in her favorite room, and we talked and then I got up and strolled around the house. It's quite amazing that every little nook and cranny tells a story of her and my dad's love for God and family.

There are pictures of their childhood and all their own siblings and parents. Those take me back to my own childhood and warm memories of laughter and joy that filled our lives every time we got together. Then there are pictures of all of us kids when we were younger living at home and then more of when we all got married. There are more pictures of when the grandchildren began to arrive, all 35 of them. Finally, there is a spot for the great children, and they number up around 60 now.

There are also albums and albums of pictures from each stage of life and in the midst of all these pictures the farm remained a constant with each family sharing a love for everything that it entails. I got a little teary eyed as I thought of how this amazing time in our lives was coming to an end, but then I quickly realized that we would always have these memories.

Each and every family member has been influenced and blessed by the life and faith of our folks, and now we have a chance to continue to share this faith with our own families and all those who God brings into our lives.

There was never any doubt who was responsible for the blessings that my parents experienced. On the home farm sign out by the road are the words "To God be the Glory." Giving God the glory didn't start with my parent's faith.

It started with their parents, grandparents and great grandparents and who knows how far back beyond them. In the Cernek family the story goes that dad's great grandpa over in Austria once said this, and it has been passed on. He said, "If you're gonna love Jesus, you gotta go the way don't nobody likes."

My great great grandpa must have experienced a little adversity for his faith. People tend to lash out at those who stand firmly on the truth of God. It's true that the human heart at its core is full of rebellion against God and His book. Why?

There are many reasons. First it tells us that we are all sinners, and we must admit this and receive God's plan for redemption. People don't like to think of themselves as sinners, but we are, and we need a plan from God to fix this?

His plan to redeem mankind was to send a Savior. The Bible tells us that Jesus Christ always existed with God in the beginning as part of God Himself. When the time was right for God to bring forth a people to Himself, the Church, Jesus stepped out of heaven, was born of a virgin and lived on this earth.

History proves that Jesus Christ was a living breathing historical person and we know from what is written about His life and what He has revealed to us by His Spirit that He was God. He died on the cross and rose again that we might believe all that is written about Him in the Bible. It's through faith in Him that we are restored and given eternal life with God the Father in His glorious heaven one day. What a joy to know this life is not the end.

Until next week, God bless.

One Man's Opinion

Electric vehicles (not ready for prime time)

Mark Mills, Senior Fellow at The Manhattan Institute, shares some eye-opening realities dealing with wind and solar.

He contradicts many, including our own current administration, who believe whole heartedly that it is our future. There are some Mark Mills haters and critics. Do your own research before you buy into their hatred and criticism.

I am far more in Mr. Mills camp than the current administration's camp. Certainly not a scientist, but arguably an educated observer, I cringe with every commercial, and there are many, pushing electric vehicles.

Former State Representative

The infra-structure necessary to support these vehicles isn't even close to meeting the demand. Hybrids make sense to me.

They can sustain themselves with their back up on board gasoline. I am writing this in Utah, where Jenny and I are vacationing. We are driving a Prius Hybrid getting 51 MPG. It almost makes me ashamed to go back home to my 16 MPG pickup.

"We cannot build enough solar and wind machines to supply us 24-7. There is no electric utopia just over the horizon. It doesn't exist and it never will.

Simple physics reveals that the sun's photons can be converted to electrons at 33 percent. Our best conversion rate currently is 26 percent efficiency.

For wind, the maximum capture is 60 percent efficiency, we currently are at 45 percent. Remember also that the sun must shine, and the wind must blow."

Oh, you say, but batteries can store the energy. "The world's largest battery factory, owned by Tesla in Nevada, would take 500 years to build enough batteries for just one day's supply of America's electricity needs. This should help explain why after 20 years and billions of dollars in subsidies, we are at only 3 percent of meeting our energy needs with wind and solar."

To me, what is truly perplexing, is how our major manufacturing companies have charged all out to become totally electric.

Ford's new electric vehicle plant in Tennessee is the best example. This very morning, watching the news in Utah, a new Ford F150 electric pickup caught fire at its manufacturing plant, destroying it and two beside it, due to a battery fire. Fighting these battery fires is a significant challenge for fire departments.

One electric car battery weighs approximately one half ton. The elements required to build that battery will require massive new mining efforts in areas that we need to protect for obvious environmental reasons. EV owners love to tell us that they are zero emission.

Not even close! If you consider the production cost, especially the 1,000 lb. battery, over the life of the vehicle, the cost of charging the battery over its lifetime may exceed the life time expense of a gas powered car.

The waste obtained from worn out batteries, solar panels, and wind turbines will be astronomical. Maybe we should consider hydro carbons which are in abundant supply and readily available. This is the basis for all of our current needs and will supply us well into the future. They are becoming cleaner all the time.

Oh, you say that we must clean up our environment. If you study your lesson you will realize that the requirements for wind and solar production and electric vehicles on the massive scale necessary to meet our needs, which they never can, will create an environmental nightmare that is nearly unimaginable. Experts tell us it will require mining for such elements as cobalt and lithium up to 2000 percent increase and in many parts of the world that cannot be accessed. Why aren't our policy makers studying this before they tell us how "electric" we will be by 2032?

For those who choose to believe that electric vehicles are the wave of the future and far more environmentally friendly, when you look at the big picture you will be greatly disappointed.
