Work first – play later

Growing up on our family dairy farm taught us so many life lessons. One of the biggest lessons that the daily grind of dairy farming taught us was good old-fashioned hard work hard day after day. Dairy cows never take a day off or even a milking off for that matter and someone always had to be there to milk and feed them for sure. I heard stories of some old farmers who never missed a milking of their cows for over 30 years. That seems pretty unbelievable, but it was true – some of them really never did leave the farm for years and years. My parents had enough kids that we were able to set up milking schedules so that we at least got some days off here and there.

I remember when I left the farm and got my teaching degree, I was having some doubts about leaving the farm. I started teaching school and even with all its many challenges, it never came close to the challenges of farming. I remember thinking that this teaching was a pretty good career because I could now give my energy and love to kids instead of animals and hopefully make a difference in some of their lives. I also realized that my hands never got dirty, I never fought the bone-chilling cold weather or the oppressive heat of the summer like I did when I was farming. When I heard a teacher complaining about how hard their job was, I just chuckled deep down inside and thought to myself, if they only knew. Even though it was tiring hard work, somehow the love of farming never got out of my system. I thought about it constantly and longed to get back to it.

I was thinking the other day about how when I was a kid, our summers were dominated by making hay. We started first crop in late May just as school was getting out. Day after day we worked hard on the first crop, which took us all the way into the summer. Our goal was to have all the first crop hay in the barn by the fourth of July. One summer, one of our favorite uncles pulled into the driveway in the middle of June with a boat behind his car. This boat had a 75-horse Mercury outboard motor on the back, and we kids were mesmerized dreaming about the prospects of getting out on the lake. We worked our tails off to get done by the fourth of July that year so we could try out this new toy. When we got the hay done, we loaded up the life jackets, lots of food, and headed to the lake. My dad and my uncle patiently helped each one of us learn to water ski. We were hooked after that and every summer for years we lived for that one week between first and second crop hay when we could get to the lake and ski. We boys got pretty darn good at it and even learned how to jump waves and ski on one ski instead of two. I can't wait to get my own grandkids on the water someday and teach them how to tube and ski.

In the book of Proverbs 28:19, we read these words of truth, "whoever works his land will have plenty of bread, but he who follows worthless pursuits will have plenty of poverty." I love the lessons we learned about working and playing hard. God has designed us to work, be productive and to enjoy life as well.

Until next week, God bless.
